When a significant security breach occurs, what should be reported FIRST to senior management?

A. A business case for implementing stronger logical access controls

B. An explanation of the incident and corrective action taken

C. An analysis of the impact of similar attacks at other organizations

D. A summary of the security logs that illustrates the sequence of events

Answer: B

Explanation:

When reporting an incident to senior management, the initial information to be communicated should include an explanation of what happened and how the breach was resolved. A summary of security logs would be too technical to report to senior management. An analysis of the impact of similar attacks and a business case for improving controls would be desirable; however, these would be communicated later in the process.
