NEW QUESTION: 3

Your company has a single Active Directory Domain Services (AD DS) domain and 1,000 Windows Vista computers.

You are planning to deploy Windows 7 and a custom application. You have the following requirements:

The application must be available to only a specific group of users.

You must be able to monitor application usage.

You need to design a deployment method for the custom application that meets the requirements.

Which deployment method should you use in your design?

- A. Software installation in Group Policy
- B. Startup scripts in Group Policy
- C. Microsoft Application Virtualization (App-V)
- D. Baseline Windows 7 image that includes the custom application

Answer: C

Explanation:

MS App-V thus allows centralized installation and management of deployed applications. It supports policy based access control; administrators can define and restrict access to the applications by certain users by defining policies governing the usage.

App-V can require that applications not be run 'cached' from workstations, or require that 'cached' App-V applications routinely update license information from the App-V server, enforcing license compliance.

These policies are centrally applied on the application repository.

App-V also allows copy of the applications across multiple application servers for better scalability and fault tolerance, and also features a tracking interface to track the usage of the virtualized application.
