NEW QUESTION: 4

An IT company uses a native Android application to manage financial data. The company now wants to use the same application for iOS mobile devices. The application architect decided to use Worklight Foundation to generate a common User Interface for Android and iOS platforms.

The application developer is required to create this new common User Interface as a Web and add it to the existing Android application.

What steps should the application developer perform to add the new Web View to the existing Android application?

A. 1. Create a Worklight Native API application.

2. Create a folder called "WebContent" in the root of the project.

3. Add the Web view to the "WebContent" folder.

B. 1. Create a Worklight project with a hybrid application with an Android environment and add the Web view.

2. Right click the Android folder of the Application and click on "Export Worklight Hybrid Resources".

3. Add the Worklight hybrid resources to a new Native API application.

- C. 1. Create a Worklight Native API application.
2. Right click the {Application name} folder and click on "Add Hybrid Resources".
3. Select the Web view and click OK.
- D. 1. Create a Worklight project with a hybrid application with an Android environment.
2. Copy the existing native code to the nativeResources folder of the Android environment.
3. Add the Web view to the Android environment.

Answer: B

Explanation:

Explanation/Reference:

IBM Worklight Application Framework helps you create hybrid applications that interact with back-end services.

You can add a Worklight web view into an existing native Android, iOS, or Windows Phone 8 application.

For example, you can transform the application from pure native to hybrid.

Using either the Eclipse plug-in or the command-line interface, export the corresponding resources from an existing Worklight hybrid project.
