Explanation: Yes. By distributing a list naming specific funds that coincidentally all happen to execute a lot of trades through GoForBroke, the broker-dealer is violating FINRA's anti-reciprocal rule. Even though GoForBroke does not appear to be offering its agents any additional compensation for selling shares of these funds, it is promoting them above other funds that aren't conducting as many trades through the broker-dealer. Recommendations should be based on a specific client's needs, not on the money the fund generates for the broker-dealer. There is no rule that prohibits a broker-dealer from selling shares of mutual funds that execute their trades through them.
