Answer: D

Explanation:

Explanation

The "enable secret" password is always encrypted (independent of the "service password-encryption" command) using MD5 hash algorithm. The "enable password" does not encrypt the password and can be view in clear text in the running-config. In order to encrypt the "enable password", use the "service password-encryption" command. This command will encrypt the passwords by using the Vigenere encryption algorithm.

Unfortunately, the Vigenere encryption method is cryptographically weak and trivial to reverse.

The MD5 hash is a stronger algorithm than Vigenere so answer 'The enable secret password is protected via stronger cryptography mechanisms' is correct.
